What the judges are looking for

"An ideal entry would demonstrate creative thinking and have clear points of difference. It would be relevant to current challenges faced by the industry, or community it serves, and would be looking to move it forward with an obvious passion."
- Grenville Cartledge, Managing Director, Four Gold

"I look principally for: value to the industry as a whole (rather than to the candidate per se); value to the cruise consumer; true innovation; results achieved; and how closely the submission addresses the award criteria. I also rate current year projects higher than ones which express aspirations yet to be achieved or were completed in previous years." - Ted Blamey, Principal, CHART Management Consultants

"Show the judging panel that you are passionate and proud of the achievements, which you describe in your entry." - Claus Bødker, Director, Cruise Baltic

"The best entries clearly communicate the innovation with a clear value proposition for the end consumer and how it differs from the status quo." - William F. Humphrey, Jr. Ph.D. Assistant Professor of Marketing, Florida International University

"A winning award entry should make a unique problem-solving contribution to the industry." - Andrew Coggins, Cruise Industry Analyst, Clinical Professor, Management & Management Science Department- Lubin School of Business, Pace University, New York
